MISSION

Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs works to foster a global conversation on major ethical challenges in international politics and in communities around the world. Broadcasting across multiple formats and media channels, Carnegie Council enriches this conversation with informative lectures, interviews, articles, and programs—all available worldwide to anyone, anywhere.

We convene:
The world's leading thinkers in the discussion of global issues

We communicate:
Ethical perspectives to a worldwide audience

We connect:
Communities through the exploration of shared values

CARNEGIE COUNCIL:
MAKING ETHICS MATTER
Dear Friends,

We are living in a time of accelerating climate change, yet the United States’ response is to withdraw from the Paris Climate Agreement and roll back environmental regulations; a time of growing distrust of governments, global organizations, and the very concept of liberal democracy; a time of fake news and misinformation, while professional journalists are persecuted in many countries and labeled “the enemy of the people” here in the United States. This is a time of nuclear threat; a time of increasing inequality, populism, nationalism, and authoritarianism; a time when a record number of people—over 68 million in 2017—have been driven from their homes; a time when artificial intelligence is on the cusp of changing our world forever.

This is a time when Carnegie Council’s work is as important as it has ever been. We believe that a well-informed world citizenry is the greatest defense against manmade upheavals and injustice. As an independent, nonpartisan institution dedicated to educating the public on the value of ethics in international affairs, the Council provides a platform for discussion in order to find ethical solutions to seemingly intractable problems. Our resulting multimedia resources are available free of charge across the globe.

This year, Carnegie Council stepped up its responses to all of the issues above. For example, the Carnegie Climate Geoengineering Governance Initiative (C2G2) team traveled the world meeting with policymakers and influencers to raise awareness about the possible risks and benefits of geoengineering, while emphasizing the necessity of creating a governance framework. William Galston, Yascha Mounk, Rob Riemen, Timothy Snyder and others analyzed the decline of liberal democracy and how to combat it. Over the summer of 2018, we launched Information Warfare, a special podcast series on state-sponsored misinformation and fake news. In Ethics & International Affairs, Amartya Sen wrote on the foundations of global justice and Ayelet Shachar and Lea Ypi looked at different aspects of unequal and unjust immigration policies. Journal roundtables included a collection of articles on rising powers and the international order, and a live panel on the ethics of climate change. Scott Sagan proposed a “nuclear necessity principle.” Philipp Alston and others discussed poverty in the United States, while Qin Gao analyzed how China is trying to combat it. The annual Carnegie–Uehiro Oxford conference was on ethics and the future of artificial intelligence.

At Carnegie Council, it is our honor and responsibility to spend each day contributing to making ethics matter. As Andrew Carnegie said, “Aim for the highest.” And though we live in a world of enduring challenges, our dedication and optimism remain untiring.

Thank you for your support.

Joel H. Rosenthal,
President, Carnegie Council

ACTIVITIES SUMMARY

Over the course of the program year from July 2017 through June 2018, the Council organized over 160 events, including lectures, interviews and panels, podcasts, conferences, site visits, briefings, and networking opportunities. Most events took place in New York, with others in Nairobi, Paris, San Francisco, Washington, and elsewhere. While a few New York programs were off the record, the majority were recorded by the in-house Carnegie Ethics Studio, led by Executive Producer Deborah Carroll.

The Studio edited the recordings to produce multiple products as follows:

- Video: full-length videos and clips of events; the Council’s weekly TV show, Global Ethics Forum; video podcasts; and live webcasts of public events.
- Audio: online audios and audio podcasts.
- Text: all recorded events have full-length transcripts, with the exception of the podcast Global Ethics Weekly.

In 2017-18, the Council ran the following programs: Asia Dialogues; Carnegie Climate Geoengineering Governance Initiative (C2G2); Carnegie New Leaders (CNL) with related podcast series; Ethics Matter Interview Series; Global Ethics Weekly (launched in June 2018); Public Affairs Program; Student Ambassadors Program; and U.S. Global Engagement.

Established in 1987, the Council’s quarterly peer-reviewed journal Ethics & International Affairs is published by Cambridge University Press. The journal also has a blog and a podcast interview series.

This year, three special projects led by Senior Fellows produced materials that can be found on carnegiecouncil.org: “Latin America and the West,” “Russian Soft Power in France,” and “The Living Legacy of the First World War.” In addition, the Council promoted the fourth annual Global Ethics Day on October 18, 2017, organized the annual student essay and photo contests, and expanded the online education section. The Council also publishes a monthly web column, Carnegie Ethics Online, and occasional online articles.

Asia Dialogues

Launched in 2016 by Senior Fellow and Program Director Devin Stewart, Carnegie Council’s Asia Dialogues program advances cross-cultural dialogue and offers critical insights on how shifts in the global order are affecting the United States and Asia. The program hosts people-to-people exchanges, facilitates original research, and produces timely podcasts, videos, and reports on the most consequential moral, economic, and strategic issues of this era. In doing so, the program also cultivates the next generation of moral leaders across the Pacific.

Site Visit to Yogyakarta, Indonesia for Research on Religion and Tolerance

In October 2017, Stewart led a group of twelve Pacific Delegates on a week-long research delegation trip to Yogyakarta, Indonesia, to examine the role of religion and pluralism in Indonesian politics and society. Selected from a large number of qualified applicants, the delegates represented a diverse array of professional and academic backgrounds, originating from North America and six Asian countries. The group participated in classroom discussions, expert lectures, cultural activities, and site visits designed by Carnegie Council’s Pacific Fellow Dicky Sofjan of Gadjah Mada University in cooperation with the Indonesian Consortium for Religious Studies (ICRS). Carnegie Council would like to thank the fellows, delegates, and participants as well as the Henry Luce Foundation, Gadjah Mada University, and ICRS for their support and invaluable advice toward making this successful project possible. For a list of the Pacific Delegates, see page 40.

In preparation for the trip, the delegates took a ten-week online summer course on Indonesia, funded by the Henry Luce Foundation. The course, which consists of readings and discussion questions, is available to everyone at https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/education/002/syllabi/00017. In addition, program associate Amanda Ghanoni and intern Rosa Evaline created a delegates’ handbook, which was supported by a grant provided by the Strauss Center at the University of Texas.

On his return from Asia, Stewart gave a lecture at Johns Hopkins SAIS on politics and religion in Indonesia (the annual theme at SAIS for 2017). He also gave a virtual lecture on this topic to a group at the University of Texas, Austin.

Focus on the Philippines

After the October site visit to Indonesia, Stewart spent a few days in Manila for a research project on domestic politics in the Philippines and the state’s relations with regional neighbors. This project was funded by the Japan External Trade Organization (JETRO). He also worked on arrangements for the October 2018 climate change research delegation trip to Manila. The Pacific Delegates for this trip were appointed in February 2018. Their ten-week online preparatory course is available here: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/education/002/syllabi/000016.

Podcasts
Stewart conducted thirty-six podcasts for Asia Dialogues this year (in addition to several that were not Asia-related). Here are some of the highlights:

Indonesia and the Philippines
“Indonesia is now going down the Pakistan route,” said Andreas Harsono of Human Rights Watch in a February 2018 interview, one of the year’s most downloaded podcasts. “There are more and more political manipulations using the blasphemy law, and there are more and more discriminatory regulations against minorities in Indonesia.” Julie Chernov Hwang of Goucher College talked about her book Why Terrorists Quit, based on over 100 interviews with current and former leaders and followers of radical Islamist groups in Indonesia. Sandra Hamid, the Asia Foundation’s country representative to Indonesia, spoke about the worrying trend of normalizing intolerance in Indonesia, and Cornell University’s Tom Pepinsky discussed his book Piety and Public Opinion: Understanding Indonesian Islam.

President Rodrigo Duterte of the Philippines has killed thousands in his “war on drugs,” idolizes Russian President Vladimir Putin, and openly uses fake news and excessive nationalism to consolidate his power. Manila-based political analyst Richard Heydarian spoke about his book The Rise of Duterte and John Gershman of New York University also analyzed the Duterte phenomenon.

Burma (Myanmar) and the Plight of the Rohingya
In November 2017, Francis Wade, author of Myanmar’s Enemy Within, described the historical background to the persecution of the Muslim Rohingya minority and gave a first-hand account of the current situation. The Council’s most downloaded audio podcast for the program year was Stewart’s January 2018 conversation with former ambassador to Burma Derek Mitchell, who lamented that Aung San Suu Kyi was not providing the necessary moral leadership. Muhammad Musa is executive director of BRAC, which is working with the one million Rohingya refugees living in camps in Bangladesh. In May 2018, he described the many problems they face, including growing tensions with the host community and the threat of the coming monsoon season, which may bring floods and landslides.

Two Podcast Series: Rising Tensions in Asia, and Information Warfare
Stewart hosted the “Rising Tensions in Asia” interview series over the summer of 2017, discussing topics ranging from the situation in individual countries to U.S.-Asia relations under President Trump and the future of Asia. Speakers included sociologist Amitai Etzioni on avoiding war with China; Robert Dujarric of Temple University (Japan campus) on the “Trump effect” on Japan; Asia Society’s Isaac Stone Fish on facts and fiction about North Korea; Ziad Haider of CSIS on U.S.-Asia economic ties under Trump; Mira Rapp-Hooper of Center for a New American Security on “subcontracting” U.S. policy toward Asia; and Stratfor founder George Friedman on the end of the international order and what that will mean for Asia. To access all the podcasts in this series, go to: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/news/announcements/2017-09-06-podcasts-on-rising-tensions-in-asia.

Finally, over the summer of 2018, Stewart launched a new special interview series titled “Information Warfare,” looking at disinformation campaigns and fake news. Find it here: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/programs/information-warfare.

In Defense of the Trump-Kim Summit
In June 2018, Stewart published a provocative article on the Singapore meeting between President Donald Trump and North Korean leader Kim Jong-un. “As a long-time Asia watcher, I feel it’s important to defend the value of the Singapore summit,” he wrote. “The meeting has served to establish rapport between the U.S. and North Korean leaders and a more positive tone, reduce the chance of war, launch a framework for technical arms negotiations, and set the broad goal of peace on the Korean Peninsula. All unthinkable a few months ago.” It was published both on medium.com and on the Council’s website. Read it here: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/publications/ethics_online/in-defense-of-the-trump-kim-summit.

The Asia Dialogues program gratefully acknowledges support from the Henry Luce Foundation, Carnegie Corporation of New York, Japan External Trade Organization, the Strauss Center at the University of Texas, the Taiwan Foundation for Democracy, and the Robert J. Myers Fund.

Carnegie Climate Geoengineering Governance Initiative (C2G2)

In October 2018, the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC) issued a Special Report on Global Warming (SR15) with a dramatic headline: Limiting temperature rise to 1.5°C, seen by many as a crisis point, “would require rapid, far-reaching, and unprecedented changes in all aspects of society.”

This stark message followed yet another year of extreme weather events, in which it became increasingly clear that the consequences of climate change are already with us, and that many communities will struggle to cope with any further warming.

These developments have prompted growing questions about what approaches—in addition to massive emission cuts—might be available to avert crisis, including the potential for measures to remove large amounts of carbon dioxide from the atmosphere (Carbon Dioxide Removal) or reflect more heat away from the planet (Solar Geoengineering).

The IPCC report itself specifically said that “all pathways that limit global warming to 1.5°C with limited or no overshoot project the use of carbon dioxide removal (CDR) on the order of 100–1000 GtCO2 over the twenty-first century.”

This enormous task, it added, would be “subject to multiple feasibility and sustainability constraints.” Some might consider that an understatement.

Launched in 2017, The C2G2 initiative is led by Senior Fellow and Executive Director Janos Pasztor. It seeks to catalyze the creation of effective governance for climate geoengineering technologies by shifting the conversation from the scientific and research community to the global policymaking arena, and by encouraging a broader, society-wide discussion about the risks, potential benefits, and ethical and governance challenges raised by climate geoengineering. C2G2 is impartial. It is not for or against the research, testing, or potential use of climate geoengineering technologies. That is a choice for society to make.

Over the course of 2017-18, the C2G2 team has traveled the world alerting policymakers that the conversation may start to shift in this direction, and that if it does, governance must take center stage. A growing number now feel the time for this discussion has arrived.

But currently, the international community does not know nearly enough about the risks, costs, benefits, and governance requirements of either large-scale carbon removal or solar geoengineering to understand if these techniques could be effective, and—if so—whether, when, or how to deploy them.

C2G2 has adopted a three-step approach:
1. Highlighting the urgency of these issues to major players;
2. Learning more about the risks and potential benefits, and how to govern them; and
3. Encouraging national and international fora to set rules to progress in a safe and considered manner.

The past year has seen significant progress in raising the issue further up the agenda and growing momentum towards learning more about governance, but limited progress in terms of specific decisions.
C2G2 has engaged extensively with national governments and international organizations, and has found many doors opening to it at department head or ministerial level. The team has also briefed many leading civil society and faith groups, including the Vatican, some of which see this as one of the great emerging challenges of our time.

The IPCC’s Special Report itself contained more on solar geoengineering governance than expected. The UN Environment Programme (UNEP) will now include a chapter on it in its annual Frontiers Report, which C2G2 is helping to prepare. C2G2 is also working with the Convention on Biological Diversity to develop a research agenda to inform future decisions, and it was invited to the November 2018 inaugural meeting of the Paris Peace Forum, a major new initiative by the French government to defend the multilateral order.

Perhaps most encouragingly, following considerable country-level engagement by C2G2, several governments—led by Switzerland—have decided to promote a resolution at the fourth session of the UN Environment Assembly in Nairobi in March 2019, which, if adopted, would mandate UNEP to undertake a major state-of-play assessment of large-scale carbon removal and of solar geoengineering, for consideration in the subsequent session.

C2G2 has been increasingly active in China, a highly significant country when it comes to addressing climate change. A C2G2 meeting with the senior minister responsible for climate change has led to the consideration of this issue by senior officials in a number of departments.

In the United States, C2G2 played a behind-the-scenes role ahead of the Global Action Summit by engaging with California Governor Jerry Brown on the possibilities for state-level action on governance.

On an individual level, C2G2 team members have engaged with a variety of selected global leaders, who have agreed to use their influence to promote a society-wide conversation. Meanwhile, the C2G2 Advisory Group has continued to grow in stature, reflecting rising interest in countries around the world.

Marking this growing interest, C2G2 gained one new funder, and was able to bring on four new additional team members, adding to the team’s own diversity. In May 2018, C2G2 also issued a major influential report on the relationship between large scale carbon removal, solar geoengineering, and the Sustainable Development Goals, which is available here: https://www.c2g2.net/geoen-xsds/.

None of these developments on their own marked a breakthrough, but in aggregate the beginnings of a global policy conversation are starting to take shape, and C2G2 is emerging as an important voice in that conversation.

“Compared to even one year ago, we have seen geoengineering governance broadening out from a relatively niche academic debate to an issue that could soon emerge on the agenda of several intergovernmental processes and international organizations,” said Pasztor.

“In the coming years, we plan to raise its profile even higher, and bring it to the agendas of other organizations, following their respective mandates and areas of work. The goal is to catalyze a global learning process, to eventually enable intergovernmental decision-making on whether or not to make use of these technologies, and if yes, how.

“Ultimately—and this is particularly key for the governance of solar geoengineering—the team assumes that some level of consideration will need to take place at the UN General Assembly. UNGA is the global body with the most legitimacy to address such issues, and C2G2 is aiming towards a possible 2022 timeline for this. Judging by the events of the past year, this conversation could advance more rapidly than people imagine. What is clear is that the risks of not talking about the governance of these technologies clearly outweigh the risks of tackling them head-on. It is essential this conversation begins in earnest, before events overtake our capacity to respond.”

Since its launch in 2017, C2G2 has been supported by a grant from the V. Kann Rasmussen Foundation (VKRF). In 2018 VKRF was joined by the OAK Foundation.

Carnegie New Leaders (CNL)

The Carnegie New Leaders Program (CNL) provides enrichment opportunities for the next generation of leaders aged forty-five and under who are interested in exploring the ethical dimensions of issues relating to business, foreign policy, and economic development. Activities include off-the-record briefings, site visits, and networking and social events.

In January 2018, financial technology executive Conor Moran became the new CNL president, succeeding Julian Harper of Franklin Templeton Investments, who had served in the role for more than two years. In 2017, Amelia Wolf of Radiant Solutions and Henry Kegan of EverFi were appointed to head the Washington, DC chapter, which was previously led by the DC group’s founder Joseph Amann of Marlin Equity Partners. The Carnegie Council staff advisor is Senior Program Director and Senior Fellow Devin Stewart.

CNL New York

CNLs were treated to an array of speakers over a series of private lunches and dinners, including the following: Anthony Romero, executive director of the ACLU discussed the recent far-right protests in Charlottesville, VA and the broad implications of civil liberties under the Trump administration. Jessica C. McDougall of BlackRock’s Investment Stewardship team explained BlackRock’s corporate governance and social responsibility initiatives. A panel titled “Fighting Fake News” featured Josh Davis of Vice News, Daniel Sieberg of Google (at the time of this event), and Brennan Gilmore, who filmed the widely-viewed video of the car plowing into a crowd of protestors in Charlottesville. The speakers discussed the ethics of good reporting, protecting material by using digital encryption, and alt-right smear tactics in the media.
Site visits this year included an October 2017 visit to the Pentagon in Washington, DC to attend a private roundtable on international security operations at the Pentagon. CNLs also visited Fort Hamilton in Brooklyn where they met with senior Army officers and historians; the U.S. Military Academy at West Point, where they had a roundtable discussion on ethics in the military; and the U.S. Mission to the UN, where they met with a humanitarian advisor for an off-the-record briefing on peacekeeping missions.

As part of Women’s History Month in March 2018, and coinciding with the sixty-second session of the Commission on the Status of Women at the United Nations, CNL co-sponsored a panel with the Metro New York chapter of the U.S. National Committee for UN Women. Titled “Beyond #MeToo: An Open Dialogue,” the panel featured Deligiorgis of UN Women. Michael Kimmel of Stony Brook University, CNL member Christina Madden of the New York chapter of Women In International Security, and Kameka Dempsey of KD Leadership Strategies as moderator. Structured as a town hall meeting, the conversation touched on race and class, harassment for women in the military, and what men can and should do about gender discrimination.

Poverty and Inequality
A series of interviews examined poverty and inequality in the United States, the progress being made in China, gender inequality, and human rights in the developing world. The United States’ poverty rate is over 14 percent, affecting approximately 40 million people. UN Special Rapporteur Philip Alston traveled across the United States in 2017 and found appalling conditions, from homelessness in California to open sewage in rural Alabama. “What we need is a more rational debate, a more evidence-based policymaking approach which accepts the fact that providing the basics—providing universal

Carnegie New Leader Podcast Series
Over the program year, Carnegie Council producer and podcast host Alex Woodson conducted four interviews with current and former members of the group. Amnesty International’s Sarah Jackson explained her organization’s work documenting war crimes in South Sudan and refugees in Uganda; Hofstra University’s Professor Jessica Holzer discussed bioethics, community engagement, and car-less transportation on Long Island; U.S. Army veteran Asha Castleberry talked about Trump’s National Security Strategy and the complex situation in the Middle East; and Sujata Gadkar-Wilcox of Quinnipiac University discussed Gandhi’s “Satyagraha”—his strategy of passive resistance in the face of injustice—and how it connects to America’s gun control protests. In addition Devin Stewart spoke with ethicist John Paul Rollert (University of Chicago) about greed, movies, and capitalism. CNLs were invited to listen in to this live recording session in Carnegie Council’s studio and afterwards they adjourned to a nearby pub for an informal discussion.

Ethics Matter Interview Series
Organized by Communications Director Madeleine Lynn and Carnegie Ethics Studio Executive Producer Deborah Carroll, this series consisted of in-depth interviews with a wide variety of speakers on topics concerning ethics in international affairs. The program held twenty events this year, the majority of which were hosted by professional broadcast journalists Stephanie Sy (Yahoo News and CNN International) and Magalie Laguerre-Wilkinson (60 Minutes, CBS). With the exception of two public talks in partnership with Bard College’s Globalization and International Affairs Program all interviews were filmed on a closed set. This was the program’s final year.

The season kicked off with Scott Sagan of Stanford University, who declared that major changes must be made if U.S. nuclear war plans are to conform to the principles of the just war doctrine and the law of armed conflict. He proposed a new doctrine, “the nuclear necessity principle,” under which the United States will not use nuclear weapons against any target that could be reliably destroyed by conventional means.

CNL, Washington, DC
basic health care, providing decent schools, and so on—is a much more economically as well as socially productive way forward,” he declared. Chuck Collins of the Institute for Policy Studies grew up in a wealthy family and gave away his fortune at the age of twenty-six, yet he realizes that he still has advantages accrued over generations. The current level of inequality is bad for society as a whole, he argued. “It is not in anyone’s interest to keep moving toward a sort of economic and racial apartheid.” Automation is causing the greatest shift in human history and will put millions of Americans out of work, said entrepreneur and 2020 presidential candidate Andrew Yang. His solution? Put human values before GDP and provide a universal basic income of $1,000 a month, funded by a 10 percent value-added tax.

Meanwhile, China is making a serious effort to tackle poverty. Qin Gao of Columbia University explained the pros and cons of the Chinese “Dibao” (limited income guarantee) system and discussed Chinese President Xi Jinping’s ambitious pledge to lift 70 million people out of extreme poverty by 2020. Melanne Verveer, executive director of Georgetown's Institute for Women, Peace and Security and former ambassador-at-large for global women’s issues, said she looks forward to the day when “women’s issues” are no longer seen as marginal, but as a mainstream component of peace and prosperity. Robert Bank of American Jewish World Service discussed how he works with local activists on a range of human rights issues, such as women’s rights in India and LGBT rights in Uganda.

Climate Change and the Environment

Continuing the Ethics Matter series on climate change and the environment, Bob Inglis, former U.S. representative from South Carolina, and former climate change skeptic, outlined his Energy and Enterprise Initiative, a nationwide campaign promoting conservative and free-enterprise solutions to energy and climate challenges. Elizabeth Economy of the Council on Foreign Relations is an expert on Chinese domestic and foreign policy, especially related to environmental matters. She analyzed how climate change plays into Xi Jinping’s larger strategy for China’s economy and role on the global stage, and how his vision for addressing climate change and pollution in China is implemented in practice, especially in the hinterlands far from the rich coastal provinces. Hurricane Sandy was the catalyst that impelled Miranda Massie to quit her job as a civil rights lawyer and found the Climate Museum. “I think that climate change is THE equality and THE civil rights issue of the 21st century,” she asserted. Entrepreneur Sam Kass talked about his experiences as chef and senior policy advisor for nutrition in the White House, including small anecdotes about the Obamas, initiatives to improve schoolchildren’s health, and the lunch he served to world leaders made from food waste. He also discussed the links between climate change and food, healthy eating, and hunger in the United States and abroad. problems with analyzing vast swaths of data? One built-in issue is who decides what data to collect. For example, the choice of data collected for police work or hiring may have built-in biases, explained danah boyd (styled lower case) of Microsoft Research.

More Highlights

Other highlights included Timothy Snyder of Yale University in a public talk in partnership with Bard College on his book On Tyranny: Twenty Lessons from the Twentieth Century; historian Kate Brown on her book Plutopia, which revealed that although Chernobyl is considered the greatest nuclear disaster of all time, over the decades America’s Hanford plant and Russia’s Mayak plant each issued almost four times the amount of radiation as the disaster in the former Soviet Union; Dan Plesch of SOAS University of London, on his research on the lost history of prosecuting Axis war crimes during World War II; and Marci Shore of Yale University on her book The Ukrainian Night: An Intimate History of Revolution.

Global Ethics Weekly

Launched in June 2018, Global Ethics Weekly is a new podcast series on current international issues from an ethical perspective. Creator and host Alex Woodson talks with Carnegie Council senior staff, fellows, and affiliates, and weaves in excerpts from the Council’s extensive archive of talks by many of the world’s most distinguished political scientists and policymakers.

The program features a rotating roster of guests, including Carnegie Council President Joel Rosenthal; Senior Fellow Nikolas Gvosdev, director of Carnegie Council’s U.S. Global Engagement program and professor of national security affairs at the U.S. Naval War College; Senior Fellow Devin Stewart, director of the Asia Dialogues program; and Senior Fellow Kavitha Rajagopalan, an expert on migration and urban communities. In the first few episodes the podcast guests discussed North Korea, President Trump and NATO defense spending, and Viktor Orbán’s Hungary and the EU.

To listen to these podcasts, visit the Global Ethics Weekly webpage https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/programs/global-ethics-weekly or access them on iTunes.

Public Affairs Program

The Public Affairs Program led by Program Director Joanne Myers grapples with many of the most urgent concerns of our time. Featuring presentations by distinguished policymakers, scholars, and journalists, this widely acclaimed series has a faithful, well-informed audience for its public events. In addition to public events, Myers also conducts podcast interviews. Here are some of the highlights of the past year.

Liberal Democracies in Crisis?

Why has the United States become so polarized? Columbia University’s Mark Lilla blamed identity politics and argued that the U.S. case offers a window on the crisis of democratic citizenship worldwide. In similar vein, Amy Chua of Yale Law School charged Americans with having been blind to tribal politics and its effects. William Galston of Brookings Institution declared that the rise of anti-pluralist populist movements was caused by a combination of economic factors and migration and urged liberals to take these concerns seriously, instead of feeling morally superior.

In an October 2017 event co-sponsored by PEN America, British philosopher A.C. Grayling contended that representative democracy in the UK has been corrupted by the three B’s—blackmail, bullying, and bribery—and that the United States has similar problems. In addition, he noted the evil effects of disinformation campaigns. A YouTube clip of Grayling speaking about the influence of Cambridge Analytica on Brexit and Trump voters is one of the Council’s most popular to date. Harvard’s Yascha Mounk claimed that liberalism and democracy are coming apart, creating new forms of illiberal democracy (democracy without rights) and undemocratic liberalism (rights without democracy). Going even further, Rob Riemen, founder of the Nexus Institute in the Netherlands, warned that what we are seeing is the global resurgence of fascism.

One of the pillars of America’s democracy is free speech, and Nadine Strossen of New York Law School made an impassioned and convincing argument for why we should resist hate speech with continued free speech, not censorship.

Asia and Geopolitics

Is war between China and the United States inevitable? Harvard’s Graham Allison spoke about “Thucydides’s Trap,” the dangerous dynamic that occurs when a rising power threatens to displace a ruling power. He concluded that war could be avoided, but both nations would have to make “painful adaptations and adjustments,” starting with U.S. policy regarding the South China Sea and the Korean Peninsula. There is disturbing evidence that China is weaponizing North Korea, and it is time that Washington started asking Beijing some pointed questions, said author and lawyer Gordon Chang in November 2017, during a looming nuclear showdown. Using Marco Polo’s journey as “a geographical framing device for Eurasia today,” bestselling author and geopolitical analyst Robert D. Kaplan examined China’s ambitious “One Belt One Road” project, dissecting China’s imperial dream and its multiple, under-reported objectives.

The Perils and Promise of New Technology

Military and technology expert Paul Scharre provided a detailed explanation of developments with autonomous weapons and their potential role in future warfare, exploring some of the ethical, legal, military, and security challenges they raise. Despite defeats in Mosul and Raqqa, ISIS and other extremist groups are thriving, said Haroon K. Ullah of Georgetown University. For them, the most important battlefield is not the physical one but the informational one, and there they are winning. Alexander Klimburg of the Hague Centre for Strategic Studies also declared that the Internet has become a weapon in information warfare, arguing that while the West sees cyber threats primarily as a technical issue that could destroy infrastructure, Russia and China see the Internet as a tool for propaganda and information control.

Vivek Wadhwa, author of The Driver in the Driverless Car, said that we need to educate people about the social and ethical implications of new technologies such as widespread automation and gene editing and have honest discussions on what is good and what is bad. On the positive side, Jeremy Bailenson of Stanford University’s Virtual Human Interaction Lab described how virtual reality can be used as a force for good. By immersing people in experiences they would not otherwise have, such as the disastrous effects of climate change or the struggles of refugees, they can be galvanized to tackle problems that previously seemed remote and abstract.
Tunisia, Iran, and Turkey
Did you know that Tunisia started championing women’s rights in the eighth century, and is still far ahead of most Arab and Muslim-majority countries? But while it may serve as an inspiration, its unique history probably makes its success impossible to duplicate, said Safwan Masri, executive vice president for Global Centers and Global Development at Columbia University.

There are few countries in the world that are more misrepresented in the West than Iran. By explaining some of the country’s complex history, Yale University’s Abbas Amanat provided a context to help demystify one of the most powerful nations in the Middle East.

Regarding Turkey, Columbia University’s David L. Phillips argued that the United States should no longer regard it as an ally, but as a strategic adversary. “We need to face the fact that Turkey under Erdoğan has become a rogue regime,” he said.

More Highlights
Other memorable talks included Sir Lawrence Freedman of King’s College London on The Future of War: A History; historian John Lewis Gaddis discussing On Grand Strategy; former U.S. ambassador to Russia Michael McFaul on From Hot War to Cold Peace: An American Ambassador in Putin’s Russia; David Miliband of the International Rescue Committee on the global refugee crisis; Andrew Selee of the Migration Policy Institute on Vanishing Frontiers: The Forces Driving Mexico and the United States Together; and historian Garry Wills on What the Qur’an Meant: And Why It Matters. Due to popular demand, the Council commissioned Arabic subtitles for the video of Garry Wills’ presentation. The Arabic translation is also available as a transcript.

U.S. Global Engagement
In January 2018, the Council appointed Nikolas K. Gvosdev as Senior Fellow of the U.S. Global Engagement (USGE) Program. Gvosdev is a professor of national security affairs at the U.S. Naval War College, where he holds the Captain Jerome E. Levy Chair in economic geography and national security. He also sits on the editorial advisory board for the Council’s journal, Ethics & International Affairs (EIA), and has contributed to the EIA blog since 2014.

At Carnegie Council, he is focusing on American disengagement from global affairs in the Trump era. His work advances discussion on one of the most pressing questions for U.S. foreign policy today: To what extent does the present international order rely on active and sustained U.S. engagement and support to function?

“One aspect of my project for Carnegie Council is to assess the impact that the recession of American power and the inconsistent and more haphazard role of the United States in international affairs will have, both in the maintenance of liberal norms and values and in the defense of American geopolitical and geoeconomic interests,” said Gvosdev. “Linked to this assessment, however, is the exploration of the broad parameters of a revived American pragmatic internationalism that can resonate with voters.”

Podcasts
In a February podcast, Gvosdev talked with Kori Schake of the International Institute for Strategic Studies about civil-military relations, in particular how the American public views the military today and how the military views its relationship to society. “One of the things that comes through really clearly is that the American public knows almost nothing about our military or what they do,” she said, “and that cannot be healthy in a civilian society, in a free society, and in a democratic society.” In March, Gvosdev and Andrew Michta of the George C. Marshall European Center discussed the future of Europe in the shadow of American disengagement. Michta’s view is that that it may become “a “Europe of clusters,” where countries even within the EU will align themselves differently depending on their economic or security interests. But in any case, he said, these shifts are being largely driven by internal factors such as the migration crisis, not by U.S. policy towards Europe.

Events at Carnegie Council
In May, Gvosdev moderated a panel titled “Democracy Promotion in the Age of Trump” with former U.S. ambassador to the Czech Republic Adrian Basora and Maia Otarashvili, both currently at the Foreign Policy Research Institute. Basora made a strong case for democracy as not only promoting American values but also serving U.S. interests, while Otarashvili gave a frightening overview of the rise of “illiberal values” (Viktor Orbán’s phrase) in the Eurasia region. Basora and Otarashvili are co-editors of the volume Does Democracy Matter? The United States and Global Democracy Support, for which Gvosdev authored one of the chapters. On the morning of June 11, just after the contentious G7 summit and as Donald Trump prepared to meet North Korea’s leader Kim Jong-un in Singapore, Gvosdev moderated a panel with Kori Schake and Colin Dueck of George Mason University, which discussed the enormous divide in the way Americans assess U.S. foreign policy and the growing distrust of foreign policy and economic experts. This was followed by a day-long seminar at the Council for the USGE Study Group. Three sessions were held to explore questions of the breakdown in the narrative of U.S. global engagement, causes, and possible ways forward for rebuilding support for U.S. engagement.

Blog Posts
Gvosdev posted over a dozen blog posts between January and June. They included “State of the Union: The Liberal Leviathan is Over,” which presented his thoughts on President Trump’s first State of the Union address; “The United Nations, Human Rights, and American Disengagement”; “What Do Americans (Republican Voters) Actually Think?”; and “A ‘Values-Free’ Trans-Atlantic Relationship?” Read them on www.ethicsandinternationalaffairs.org or access them here, along with all the USGE resources: www.carnegiecouncil.org/programs/001/resources.

Engagement with other Organizations
In addition to various speaking events, Gvosdev attended two international conferences this program year as a member of the Loisach Group, which is a collaboration between the Munich Security Conference and the Marshall Center. The two conferences were the Munich Security Conference in February, and the “Transatlantic Relationship and NATO Summit 2018: Priorities and Deliverables for the NATO Summit” in Berlin in June. In February, Gvosdev took part in a roundtable discussion and listening session with the Circle of Scholars in Newport, Rhode Island. In April, he participated in the inaugural session of the “Bridging the Gap: Developing a Bipartisan, Sustainable U.S. Policy toward Russia” dialogue, sponsored by the Sustained Dialogue Institute in Washington, DC, and he continued to take part in this dialogue later in the year.

Web Column, Carnegie Ethics Online

Run by Communications Director Madeleine Lynn, this monthly web column on ethics in international affairs offers a platform for both up-and-coming and established writers from around the world. “The aim is to feature under-reported stories as well as fresh perspectives on more familiar topics,” said Lynn. Here are some of the highlights: The United States is the world’s largest consumer of illegal drugs, with the vast majority entering via Mexico. In July 2017, U.S. Army Major (and CNL) Vincent Dueñas proposed “recalibrating” the never-ending and ineffective U.S. war on drugs. “A policy that addresses the violent threat but which also reduces the source demand for the drugs stands the best chance of reducing the human toll being paid by both countries,” he wrote.

In an October article titled “Let’s Be Frank: The Impact of Dodd-Frank and International Legislation on Congolese Extractive Industry,” Bandi Mbubi, founder of the advocacy platform Congo Calling, took issue with President Trump’s proposal to kill off elements of the Dodd-Frank Act that require energy and mineral resource companies to hold U.S. companies accountable for their use of conflict minerals. He explained the damage this repeal will do to the Democratic Republic of Congo and laid out the complex situation in his native land, which suffers from poverty, autocracy, corruption, and a series of endless, bloody conflicts.

Canada’s Carleton University, saw it differently. He explained why in a closely argued November 2017 article titled “Don’t Be Fooled by Cosmetic Changes: The West-Saudi Alliance Is More Morally Dubious than Ever.” “Aside from inertia and vague promises of support in fighting terrorist groups, there is little to justify the continuation of the close relationship between self-professed liberal democratic nations and Saudi Arabia,” he concluded.

Isaias Afwerki has been president of Eritrea since 1993. How has he stayed in power for so long, even though he is highly unpopular across Eritrea, including in his home region? “Instead of rallying public support, Isaias employs coercion, imprisonment, torture, intimidation, and killing to secure obedience, while simultaneously pursuing divide-and-rule strategies,” wrote development practitioner and Eritrean native Bahlbi Y. Malk in March 2018.

Spanish journalist Javier Delgado Rivera covers the UN regularly. In a May 2018 article, “Why is the Media Unfair to the United Nations?” he examined the many and complex reasons why media coverage of the UN focuses on the organization’s faults and failures rather than its achievements and successes, and explained how the UN is trying to counter this.

“Less than 800 miles from our shores, Hondurans protesting against a fraudulent presidential election have been clubbed, shot at, terrorized, and arbitrarily arrested by the hundreds. Yet this crisis has hardly produced a blip on the radar screen of mainstream U.S. news,” wrote University of Denver’s Lynn Holland in February 2018, referring to the bitterly contested and possibly fraudulent November 2017 elections in Honduras.

When Mohammed bin Salman became the crown prince of Saudi Arabia in June 2017, many commentators were optimistic that he would bring sweeping reforms, as he promised. Carter Vance, an MA Candidate at Latin America and the West Interview Series

Though it is geographically situated in the Western Hemisphere, most conceptions of “the West” today do not include Latin America. However, Carnegie Council Senior Fellow Alexander Görlach sees the region as an essential part of the West not only because of a shared past, shared enlightenment, and shared languages, but also because of mutual philosophical traditions, political systems, and religious and ethical beliefs. To explore this idea further, Görlach spoke with luminaries across Latin America.

For Homero Aridjis, a distinguished Mexican poet, author, activist, and diplomat, the West means countries that follow Greco-Latin culture—not Anglo-Saxon culture. Centuries ago, the Spaniards brought architecture, philosophy, religion, art, and literature to Latin America. In many ways these nations are keeping Western culture alive, he told Görlach, while Europeans are losing their Western identity.

Eduardo Wolf, a professor of ancient philosophy and ethics and a newspaper editor in São Paulo, discussed the similarities and differences between studies in Latin America and Europe/North America, and the struggle to find the essence of Brazilian identity, which he believes is a common struggle in former colonies. Genaro Lozano of Ibero-American University in Mexico City is also a TV presenter, columnist, and LGBT activist. He discussed the long history and current “fragmented scenario” of LGBT rights in Mexico and other Latin American countries and explored U.S.-Mexico relations, especially since the election of Donald Trump.

Entrepreneur and former diplomat Henning Andrés Droege, who is a third generation German-Guatemalan, explained Guatemala’s German connection and discussed Guatemala’s role in geopolitics. Lastly, Colombian journalist and political scientist José Alejandro Cepeda discussed how Colombia’s decades-long civil war has shaped the Colombian identity and how long it may take before the nation truly recovers.

Russian Soft Power in France – A Special Project of the U.S. Global Engagement Program

Launched in the summer of 2017, the year-long Carnegie Council research project “Russian Soft Power in France” explored Russian influence in French political parties and civil society institutions today. The research includes historical background on relations between France and Russia, which is essential to an understanding of the current situation. This valuable case study on France sheds light on Russia’s soft power strategies to bolster allied political parties in established European democracies.

The participants were project leader and Carnegie Council Senior Fellow Marlene Laruelle, of The George Washington University; Nicolas Lebourg, of the University of Montpellier; and Jean-Yves Camus, of the French Institute for International and Strategic Affairs, Paris. Each researcher produced a paper in French (which was then translated into English) and the papers were presented at three separate events in Paris.

The papers are as follows:

• “Russian Soft Power in France: Assessing Moscow’s Cultural and Business Para-Diplomacy,” by Marlene Laruelle
• “The French Far Right in Russia’s Orbit,” by Nicolas Lebourg
• “French Political Parties and Russia: The Politics of Power and Influence,” by Jean-Yves Camus

In June 2018, Carnegie Council held a concluding event at its headquarters in New York, during which the researchers shared their findings and offered a window into Franco-Russian relations. It is important to understand that Russia and France have had a centuries-long relationship that has been mostly positive, the panel explained. Today there are layers of close economic and cultural ties as well as common geopolitical interests, and the French extreme right and Russia share many of the same conservative values. Thus while it is alarming to see the connections between the French far right and Russia, the remarkable strength of Russian influence in France is not surprising.

For the papers and resources from the concluding event in French and English, go to https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/programs/Russian-Soft-Power-in-France.

The research in France was supported by a grant from the Foundation Open Society Institute in cooperation with the Open Society Initiative for Europe of the Open Society Foundations. The concluding event in New York was funded by Rockefeller Family & Associates.

The Living Legacy of the First World War

In June 1917, the first 14,000 American Expeditionary Force soldiers landed in France. Their arrival marked a tectonic shift in global politics, as the United States turned the principled idealism of its progressive era outward in an effort to restructure a broken international system. Launched in the summer of 2017 and leading up to the hundredth anniversary of Armistice Day in 2018, the goal of “The Living Legacy of the First World War” project is to publish original research on the war, its long-term impacts on societies around the world, particularly the United States, and its lasting imprint on the present. This fellowship program is led by Senior Fellow Col. Reed Bonadonna (ret.), a former infantry officer and field historian in the U.S. Marine Corps with deployments to Lebanon and Iraq. Here are the nine selected Fellows and their research themes:

- Katherine Akey, artist, Washington, DC: “Collective Memory and the Hidden Photographic Narratives of World War I”
- Mary Barton, Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD) Historical Office: “European and American Counterterrorism Strategies in the Aftermath of World War I”
- Philip Caruso, Harvard University: “Airpower During World War I: Transforming International Law”
- Zach Dorfman, investigative journalist and Carnegie Council Senior Fellow: “Chemical Weapons from the Great War to Syria and Beyond”
- Tanisha Fazal, University of Minnesota: “The Politics and Medicine of Treating Post-Traumatic Stress Since World War I”
- Richard Millett, University of Missouri-St. Louis: “The United States, the Western Hemisphere, and World War I: Forgotten Aspects”
- Seiko Mimaki, Takasaki City University of Economics, Japan: “World War I as a Key Moment in the History of Humanitarianism: Jane Addams and Her Cosmopolitan Ethics”
- Charles Sorrie, Trent University, Canada: “The Legacy of American Press Censorship During the First World War”

“The list of topics gives some idea of the influence and relevance of the First World War in our own time,” said Bonadonna. “One hundred years after what H. G. Wells called a war to end wars, war—its costs and consequences—is still very much with us, and the need for compassion and principled engagement just as great.”

Over the course of 2017–18 program year, Bonadonna conducted a series of interviews with each fellow on their research. The audio and transcripts can be found here: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/programs/WWI.

In September 2018, Bonadonna, Barton, Caruso, Dorfman, and Millett were session speakers at the Carnegie Peacebuilding Conversations, a three-day program at the Peace Palace in The Hague, presented by Carnegie institutions worldwide and other partners. Carnegie Council President Joel Rosenthal also attended and was one of the plenary speakers.

The other Fellows traveled to New York in November 2018 and presented their work at a Carnegie Council luncheon just after Armistice Day as part of the city’s commemoration of the World War I Centennial.

Book Launch for The Ordinary Virtues: Moral Order in a Divided World, September 2017

What moral values do human beings hold in common? As globalization draws us together economically, are our values converging or diverging? These were the questions posed by Carnegie-Uehiro Centennial Chair Michael Ignatieff as part of the Council’s multi-year centennial project on global ethics. The project took Ignatieff and his Carnegie Council team to Latin America, North America, Eastern Europe, Asia, and Africa. Through dialogues with favela dwellers in Brazil, South Africans and Zimbabweans living in shacks, Japanese farmers, gang leaders in Los Angeles, and monks in Myanmar, they found that while human rights may be the language of states and liberal elites, the moral language that resonates with most people is that of everyday virtues: tolerance, forgiveness, trust, and resilience.

Forging the Future: The Next Century of Andrew Carnegie’s Legacy – April 2018 Launch Event with Bruce Jentleson

Andrew Carnegie’s remarkable philanthropic legacy has evolved through the work of the institutions he founded and inspired. To mark the hundredth anniversary of his death in 2019, Carnegie institutions in New York, Pittsburgh, Washington, DC, and Europe are sponsoring events highlighting different aspects of the Carnegie legacy in peace, education, and philanthropy. The series will culminate with the Carnegie Medal of Philanthropy awards ceremony in October 2019.

The first event in the series took place at Carnegie Council in April 2018, when Carnegie Corporation of New York and the Council hosted a special lecture by Council Trustee Bruce W. Jentleson, a leading American foreign policy scholar, on his new book The Peacemakers: Leadership Lessons from Twentieth-Century Statesmanship. At a time when peace seems elusive and conflict endemic, Jentleson’s book makes a forceful and inspiring case for the continued relevance of statesmanship and diplomacy and provides practical guidance to twenty-first-century leaders seeking lessons from some of history’s most accomplished negotiators, activists, and trailblazers.

Since 2003, this annual international conference has convened in Tokyo, Oxford, or New York to discuss important topics concerning practical ethics. This year, the meeting took place at Carnegie Council’s New York headquarters, presided over by Dr. Noboru Maruyama, secretary-general of the Uehiro Foundation on Ethics and Education; Joel Rosenthal, president of Carnegie Council; and Julian Savulescu, director of the Oxford Uehiro Centre for Practical Ethics, University of Oxford. The lively panel discussions with speakers from Europe, Asia, and the United States explored the following questions: Can machines be programmed with AI to make moral choices? How will increasing automation affect the human need and expectation for meaningful work? How will AI change work and life? Can robots engage with human beings as tutors, healthcare providers, and companions? How is AI-equipped technology (such as drones and “killer robots”) changing long-standing norms of public security?

May 2018 Fourth Annual Student Research Conference

Organized by Senior Fellow and Program Director Devin Stewart with the help of the Council’s Student Ambassadors (see page 13), the fourth annual Student Research Conference started with a networking session, followed by nine student presentations, selected from thirty-two submissions from the greater New York area. Two winners were selected: “The Bitter-Sweet Truth about Development: Brazil, Nutrition, and Diabetes,” by Patrick Hickey of Marist College; and “A (Restrained) Call to Arms: A Comprehensive Ethical Analysis of Just War Theory in Historically Significant Cyber-Warfare Conflicts,” a group research project by West Point Cadets Michael Deegan, John Erskine, Riaz Lane, Samuel Reichenthal, and Jacob Wells. The winners all received one-year memberships to the Council’s Carnegie New Leaders program.

Other presentation topics included refugees, social media and fake news, transitional justice, homelessness, and democracy. The judges were from the U.S. Navy, Hunter College, Bard College, and Carnegie Council.

Fourth Annual Global Ethics Day

October 18, 2017, marked the fourth annual Global Ethics Day, with participation from over sixty organizations and individuals from thirty-one countries on five continents. Founded by Carnegie Council in 2014 to celebrate its centennial, Global Ethics Day is an opportunity to explore the role of ethics in our professions and our everyday lives, and from The Gambia to Nicaragua to Romania, everyone did so in their own way. Topics this year included ethics in business, climate change, personal values, democracy, and human rights. Here are a few highlights:

The Association of Chartered Certified Accountants (ACCA), a global organization founded in the UK, took the day as an opportunity to focus on why ethics and professionalism matter on a global level. “On this Global Ethics Day, we ask you to recommit to ensuring business does the right thing and is a force for good,” wrote ACCA’s chief executive, Helen Brand OBE, and the director of the Institute of Business Ethics, Philippa Foster Back CBE, in a joint full-page letter published in the Financial Times. ACCA promoted the day around the world, and the ACCA Singapore office launched its first ever Ethics Film Festival to coincide with October 18. For the fifth Global Ethics Day in 2018, Carnegie Council is partnering with ACCA and CFA Institute on a series of short videos entitled Ethics in Business: In Their Own Words, which will be rolled out over the course of 2018/19.

In Brazil, the Study Group on Ethics and Sustainability, part of the Business Administration Council for the State of São Paulo (CRA-SP), held a full-day series of free, public presentations on ethics in business in response to corruption in Brazil. They also planted a tree and launched a physical and virtual time capsule to be opened on Global Ethics Day in 2025. At the University of Buraimi’s College of Health Sciences in Oman, the theme was fighting climate change: The dean, students, and government officials planted trees, and students held a clean-up drive and promoted awareness at a local supermarket. The Geneva-based international network www.globethics.net took the golden rule, “treating others as you would like to be treated,” as its theme this year, inviting everyone to post stories on how they apply the golden rule in their day-to-day lives. Inspired by globethics.net, the University of Malawi held a panel discussion looking at the golden rule as it is reflected in Islam, Christianity, Bantu ethics, and the work of Immanuel Kant.

Many universities around the world held ethics panels, workshops, and classes, including Bard College and affiliates in New York, New Orleans, Berlin, and East Jerusalem. To see a full list of participants, along with many of the photos posted on social media, go to https://globalethicsday.org/global-ethics-day-2017/.

Robert J. Myers Fellows Fund
As president of Carnegie Council from 1980 to 1994, Robert J. Myers spearheaded an international effort to promote ethics education. In honor of his legacy, Carnegie Council established the Robert J. Myers Fellows Fund in 2014, the Council’s Centennial year. The Fund supports and promotes activities of the Carnegie Council network that embody Myers’s vision of effective ethical inquiry rooted in local experiences and communities. This year ten projects were chosen, located in Djibouti, Ethiopia, Ghana, India, Indonesia, Japan, Myanmar, Namibia, South Africa, and the United States. Here are the recipients and their projects:

- Atik Ambarwati, Kartini Indonesia Foundation, Indonesia, Pacific Delegate
  Research on ways to promote religious tolerance and social inclusivity for women and youth in Jepara District, Central Java, Indonesia.

Annual Contests

In your opinion, what is the greatest ethical challenge facing the world today? This was the topic for the 2017 international student/teacher essay contest. Of the five winners (three high school students and two undergraduates), two came from South Korea and three from the United States. Their essays addressed sexual exploitation, geoengineering, artificial intelligence, genetic engineering, and the universal right to education.

The topic for the international student photo contest was climate change. We asked contestants to submit photos showing examples of climate change or examples of combating or adapting to climate change. Two prizes were awarded, with the first prize going to a high school student in Beijing and the second prize going to a high school student in Pennsylvania.

Free Online Education Materials for High Schoolers and Undergraduates

Over the summer of 2018, Education Fellow Elena Shanbaum added timely new high school and undergraduate materials to the Council’s extensive online Education Section.

These include two new sections:

- Thinking Democratically: Lessons, worksheets, activities, and more, designed to stimulate student thought about what it means to be a part of a democracy.

- Moral Leadership and the Environment: Who is responsible for protecting our Earth? Classroom activities, worksheets, and a PowerPoint lesson on moral leadership and the environment, using the Flint water crisis as a case study.

Shanbaum also expanded the Worksheets and Excerpts on History and Government collection:

- The new Political Ideologies section features a series of worksheets on liberal democracy, illiberal democracy, and fascism, plus a primer on socialism, capitalism, and social democracy.

- The U.S. History and Government section includes new worksheets on the Iraq War.

“This is just the beginning,” said Joel H. Rosenthal, president of Carnegie Council. “Over the coming year, Carnegie Council will be piloting an expanded education project focused on two interrelated topics: Ethics and Democracy. Each topic will be associated with a module of activities for high school and early undergraduate students taking place over the course of the academic year. We hope that teachers and students will continue to check out the website for new materials and opportunities to get involved.”
Ethics & International Affairs, the Council’s flagship publication, is a peer-reviewed quarterly journal published by Cambridge University Press. EIA publishes original essays and articles that apply rigorous thinking about principles of ethics and justice to discussions of real-world issues related to current policy developments, global institutional arrangements, and the conduct of important international actors. This year it showcased an exceptional list of contributions covering a broad range of topics, including climate engineering, rising powers and the international order, and migration. For current and past issues, blog posts, and more, go to ethicsandinternationalaffairs.org.

Fall 2017 (Vol 31.3)
Among the major contributions to this issue are a seminal essay by Nobel Prize recipient Amartya Sen (Harvard University) on the foundations of global justice and a highly provocative essay by acclaimed scholar Amitav Acharya (American University) on the multiplex world order. It also includes features by Jamie Gaskarth (University of Birmingham) on rising powers and their conceptions of responsibility, Laura Hartman (University of Wisconsin Oshkosh) on the “playing God” critique of climate engineering, and Aidan Hehir (University of Westminster) on improving the responsibility to protect through legal reform. In addition, Chris Brown (London School of Economics and Political Science) provides a pointed review essay on global poverty alleviation and noted just war scholar James Turner Johnson (Rutgers University) contributes a review essay on the ethics of insurgency. (See also EIA Managing Editor Adam Read-Brown’s podcast interview with Amitav Acharya.)

Winter 2017 (Vol. 31.4)
Headlining this issue is a roundtable on “The Role of International Law and Just War Theory,” featuring essays by Edward Barrett (United States Naval Academy), James Turner Johnson (Rutgers University), David Luban (Georgetown University), and Valerie Morkevičius (Colgate University). In addition, major attention was paid to climate engineering, including an essay on geoengineering governance by Janos Pasztor (Carnegie Climate Geoengineering Governance Initiative) as well as a feature by Christopher J. Preston (University of Montana) examining moral culpability in climate engineering, with responses from Holly Lawford-Smith (University of Melbourne), Sikina Jinnah (University of California Santa Cruz) and Douglas Bushey (U.S. Environmental Protection Agency), and Mike Hulme (University of Cambridge). The issue also provides an essay by Jonathan D. Caverley (U.S. Naval War College) on how to slow the proliferation of major conventional weapons.

Spring 2018 (Vol 32.1)
For the first time in more than a decade, the editors designated the spring issue of Ethics & International Affairs as a Special Issue. The centerpiece is a roundtable on the theme of “Rising Powers and the International Order,” organized by G. John Ikenberry (Princeton University) and Shiping Tang (Fudan University), with further contributions from Anne L. Clunan.
This distinguished group of international scholars reflects on the ongoing grand power transition, focusing on the ways that rising states may be shaping and reshaping global order. Each essay investigates the present and future order from the perspective of a different international actor, including China, India, Russia, the EU, the United States, as well as the BRICS writ large. The issue also includes an essay on the practice of “golden visas” and the marketization of citizenship by Ayelet Shachar (Max Planck Institute for the Study of Religious and Ethnic Diversity and the University of Toronto), and a review essay on eliminating corruption by Gillian Brock (University of Auckland). (See also EIA Associate Editor John Krzyzaniak’s podcast interview with Ayelet Shachar.)

Roundtable on Ethical Leadership and Climate Change

In April 2018, the editors organized a panel of scholars and practitioners for a roundtable on ethical leadership and climate change at the annual International Studies Association conference, held in San Francisco. Moderated by Carnegie Council Senior Fellow Janos Pasztor, the roundtable included EIA board members Robyn Eckersley (University of Melbourne) and Darrel Moellendorf (Goethe University Frankfurt), as well as the Seychelles ambassador to the U.S. and member of the C2G2 Advisory Group, Ronald Jumeau, and climate activist Suma Peesapati (Peesapati Law and Communities for a Better Environment). Find the full transcript, audio, and video here: carnegiecouncil.org/studio/multimedia/20180405-climate-change-and-power-to-act-ethical-approach-for-practical-progress.

Summer 2018 (Vol. 32.2)

With an emphasis on “fairness,” this issue contains essays by Lea Ypi (London School of Economics and Political Science and the Australian National University) on the importance of social class in migration, Jennifer L. Tobin (Georgetown University) on international investment agreements and “regulatory chill,” and Cristina Cielo and Lisset Coba (Facultad Latinoamericana de Ciencias Sociales Ecuador) on the intersection of gender and disease in extractive economies. In addition, Gregory M. Reichberg and Henrik Syse (Peace Research Institute Oslo) provide a peer-reviewed feature on the ethics of threats in international relations, and Alasia Nuti (University of York) on the structural injustices that characterize temporary labor migration within the EU.

EIA Interview Series (Podcasts with Transcripts)

This long-running series provides journal contributors with an opportunity to discuss their recent work. The interviews this year, with one author from each issue, were conducted by EIA Managing Editor Adam Read-Brown and Associate Editor John Krzyzaniak.

- Amitav Acharya discussed the emerging global order that he calls a decentered, “multiplex” world, one where there are multiple consequential actors and complex global interdependence.
- Jonathan D. Caverley outlined his proposal for slowing down the spread of proliferation of major conventional weapons, such as aircraft and artillery, which are being used to deadly effect in Syria and elsewhere.

• Daniele Archibugi discussed his new book, Crime and Global Justice, which examines the history of global criminal justice through case studies of the trials of several heads of state, including Augusto Pinochet and Saddam Hussein.

• Ayelet Shachar talked about some of the ethical issues raised by “golden visas” for the super-rich. There is a global surge in such visas, and those who obtain them often have “no connection to the country other than a wire transfer, the ability to press a button, and pass a significant sum of money across borders.”

• Lea Ypi examined injustices related to immigration policy, highlighting the importance of social class. “In both political debates and academic debates on migration the question of class is often missed,” she noted.

Online Blogs and Exclusives

Founded by Andrew Carnegie in 1914, Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs is an educational, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization that produces lectures, publications, and multimedia materials on the ethical challenges of living in a globalized world. Its work is rooted in the premise that the incorporation of moral principles into discussions of international affairs will yield a more peaceful, just world. The educational value of the Council’s programs lies in its three-part formula: thematic focus on ethics, access to world-renowned experts, and an in-house studio that produces original video and audio resources for a global market.
