Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs works to foster a global conversation on major ethical challenges in international politics and in communities around the world. Broadcasting across multiple formats and media channels, Carnegie Council enriches this conversation with informative lectures, interviews, articles, and programs—all available worldwide to anyone, anywhere.

We convene:
The world’s leading thinkers in the discussion of global issues

We communicate:
Ethical perspectives to a worldwide audience

We connect:
Communities through the exploration of shared values

CARNEGIE COUNCIL:
MAKING ETHICS MATTER
PRESIDENT’S MESSAGE

Dear Friend of the Council,

Persistent nationalism and populism defined the context for Carnegie Council’s 105th year of activities.

Leaders continued to retreat from commitments to the rules-based world order. Fractured globalization was abetted by dissolving ethics. Illiberalism was on the rise as leaders attacked democratic institutions such as the courts and the press while ignoring or enabling alarming violations of human rights.

While the full story of this trying period is yet to be told, we can report that Carnegie Council responded with characteristic energy to create a counter-narrative emphasizing thoughtful, principled alternatives to the status quo.

Our Public Affairs program featured world-renowned experts on maintaining alliances to enhance security, responding to challenges to liberal democracy, and confronting threats to free speech.

Our U.S. Global Engagement program reported on how public opinion is shaping a new approach to America’s role in the world, taking account of the Trump administration’s America First policy and its effects at home and abroad.

The Asia Dialogues program examined the effects of climate change through a study trip to the Philippines while the Carnegie Climate Governance Initiative (C2G) program expanded the debate on effective and inclusive governance for emerging climate technologies—in particular, for solar radiation modification (SRM) and large-scale carbon dioxide removal (CDR).

The Ethics in Business interviews expanded the dialogue on “corporate purpose” by engaging CEOs around the world. This program grew out of encounters from Global Ethics Day, which this year resulted in 140+ activities in 50+ countries.

Two anniversaries formed the basis for powerful learning opportunities. To commemorate the 100th anniversary of the ending of World War I, the Council convened two workshops on The Living Legacy of World War I. The first of these workshops took place in cooperation with our sister institution, The Peace Palace, in The Hague, The Netherlands.

A second historical milestone of this past year was the 20th Anniversary of the Good Friday Peace Agreement. The Council was pleased to sponsor a workshop to commemorate this achievement with the Carnegie-United Kingdom Trust.

Partnerships continue to be a source of new opportunity for the Council and its constituents. Of special note is the ongoing Carnegie-Uehiro-Oxford conferences. This year’s theme was “Re-Thinking Bioethics for the 21st Century.”

Special thanks are due to all those who participated in the Council’s youth outreach programs, especially the Carnegie New Leaders program, the Student Ambassador program, and the Student Research Conference. Thanks to these efforts, the Council is reaching young people in New York City and around the world.

All this program activity was complemented by the Council’s robust multimedia publishing platform, including the Ethics & International Affairs journal published by Cambridge University Press, Global Ethics Weekly podcasts, the Carnegie Council YouTube Channel, and more.

And so we conclude a busy year with the belief that we met our mission and the moment. Through this work we have told a story that presents the possibility for a better future. Democracy and internationalism have not been defeated. To revitalize their prospects for success we have tried to show exactly why and how “ethics matter.”

Thank you for your support,

Joel H. Rosenthal
President
Over the course of the program year from July 2018 through June 2019, the Council organized over 100 events, including lectures, interviews, panels, podcasts, conferences, site visits, briefings, and networking opportunities. Most events took place in New York, with others in Oxford, The Hague, Washington, DC, and elsewhere around the globe. While a few programs were off-the-record, the majority were recorded by the in-house Carnegie Ethics Studio, led by Executive Producer Deborah Carroll.

The Studio edited the recordings to produce multiple products as follows:

- Video: full-length videos and clips of events; video podcasts; and live webcasts of public events.
- Audio: online audios and downloadable podcasts.
- Text: all recorded events have full-length transcripts.
- Access audios, transcripts, and full-length videos at https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/studio/multimedia

In 2018-19, the Council ran the following programs:
- 1919: The Year of the Crack-Up; Asia Dialogues; Carnegie Climate Governance Initiative (C2G);
- Carnegie New Leaders (CNL); Ethics in Business; Global Ethics Weekly; Information Warfare; Latin America & the West; Public Affairs; Student Ambassadors; and U.S. Global Engagement (USGE).

Established in 1987, the Council’s quarterly peer-reviewed journal Ethics & International Affairs is published by Cambridge University Press. The journal also has a blog and a podcast interview series.

This year, the Council promoted the fifth annual Global Ethics Day on October 18, 2018, with 140+ activities in over 50 countries. The Council also organized the fifth annual student research conference in New York and a worldwide student essay contest asking students, “Is it important to live in a democracy?” The Council also published a monthly web column, Carnegie Ethics Online, as well as additional occasional online articles.

During the 2018-2019 program year, The Council also ran the Global Ethics Network. This international community bulletin board received contributions from thousands of members across 150+ countries before formally concluding in 2020.
Asia Dialogues

Launched in 2016 by former Senior Fellow and Program Director Devin Stewart, Carnegie Council’s Asia Dialogues program advanced cross-cultural dialogue and offered critical insights on how shifts in the global order are affecting the United States and Asia. The program hosted people-to-people exchanges, facilitated original research, and produced timely podcasts, videos, and reports on the most consequential moral, economic, and strategic issues of this era. In doing so, the program also cultivated the next generation of moral leaders across the Pacific.

Site visit to the Philippines for research on climate change

In October 2018, Carnegie Council’s Asia Dialogues program led a fact-finding trip of Pacific Delegates to Manila to investigate the effects of climate change on the Philippines. How is the encroaching threat of climate change reshaping culture, politics, and even faith? How can the claim of economic prosperity be reconciled with the equally valid claim of sustainability and conservation? How can the way that Filipinos cope with extreme climate change-related weather and disasters inform the rest of the world about response and resilience?

Several articles, videos, and podcasts resulted from this trip. You can find them all here: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/publications/articles_papers_reports/resources-philippines-climate-change-delegation-2018

Podcasts

Stewart also continued with Asia Dialogues podcasts for the program year. Prominent guests included Joshua Eisenman, Bethany Allen-Ebrahimian, Jerome A. Cohen, Bonnie S. Glaser, Megha Rajagopalan, Andrew J. Nathan, Russel Hsaio, and Alexis Dudden, among many others.

Information Warfare

With the growing power of surveillance technology and digital media, political influence operations have become an increasingly attractive tool of great power statecraft. Part of Carnegie Council’s Asia Dialogues program, the “Information Warfare” interview series aimed to understand political influence campaigns, how they work, what their goals are, and how democracies can respond.

Hosted by Devin Stewart, prominent guests included Molly McKew, Zach Dorfman, Adam Segal, Isaac Stone Fish, Joshua Kurantzick, and Peter Mattis, among many others.

Carnegie Climate Governance Initiative (C2G)

Led by Senior Fellow and Executive Director Janos Pasztor, C2G seeks to catalyze the creation of effective and inclusive governance for emerging climate technologies—in particular, for solar radiation modification (SRM) and large-scale carbon dioxide removal (CDR).

While cutting emissions remains the priority to tackle the climate crisis, scientists and policymakers are exploring a number of potential new approaches, including ways to remove CO2 already in the atmosphere, and to reflect back sunlight to lower global temperatures.

All have risks and costs as well as potential benefits. C2G is impartial regarding the research, testing, or potential use of any specific technologies or interventions. These are choices for society to make. But all need governance in order to make these choices, including managing risks.

C2G sees governance as a broad concept. Urgent action is needed at multiple levels by diverse actors to implement existing multilateral agreements, including by reducing emissions, removing excess carbon from the atmosphere, building resilience, and adapting to remaining climate impacts.

These actions should be guided by science, and by honest, open, inclusive, and informed conversations addressing all potential measures to manage the increasing risks posed by climate change.

In the first instance, C2G has focused on expanding the conversation from the scientific and research community to the global policymaking arena, and encourages well-informed, society-wide discussions about the ethical and governance challenges posed by emerging approaches.

C2G’s work during this period saw four major external developments: (i) the release of the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change’s (IPCC) Special Report on Global Warming of 1.5°C; (ii) the advancement of a resolution on the governance of “geoengineering” by Switzerland for the 4th session of the UN Environment Assembly held in March 2018; (iii) the publication of the 2018 UNEP Emissions Gap Report; and (iv) preparations for the UN Climate Change Conference (COP24) in Katowice.

Over the course of 2018-19 program year, the C2G team engaged with policymakers and their advisors in all regions of the world raising their alertness to the shifting dimensions of the climate change debate.

C2G spoke with civil society groups, foundations, private sector groups, UN entities, and governments about the need to identify acceptable approaches by balancing challenges with opportunities, and the need to fill key governance gaps.

How should large-scale CDR be governed, nationally and internationally, to ensure just outcomes in line with the Sustainable Development Goals? What safeguards could stop SRM research heading down a slippery slope to undesired deployment? How could the world avoid undermining other essential climate actions with these discussions?

Key intergovernmental processes in answering these questions include the United Nations General Assembly, the United Nations Environment Assembly (UNEA), United Nations Framework Convention on Climate Change (UNFCCC), and the Convention on Biological Diversity (CBD).

Of particular importance, this period saw Switzerland together with some 10 other countries propose a UNEA resolution to kick-start an international assessment and learning process about these technologies.

While the resolution ultimately did not pass, it garnered significant attention, and resulted in a new phase for C2G’s work. Government representatives began discussing the governance of geoengineering directly with each other—often directly as a result of C2G’s outreach.

C2G also expanded its activities with regional intergovernmental processes. It started to look at the challenges posed to governance in the Arctic region, the high Himalayas region, and the Pacific, all areas where climate change has particularly severe impacts.

And C2G developed relationships with a number of influential think tanks. Pasztor gave a speech at the Council on Foreign Relations, and was featured as a panelist at Chatham House, the Royal Institute of International Affairs.

This period also saw an expansion of C2G’s outreach to the Asia region. For example, it spoke about governance of CDR and SRM at the fifth Taihu World Cultural Forum in China, and attended the third Forum of Ministers and Environment Authorities of Asia Pacific hosted in Singapore.

To reflect the evolving conversation, the initiative changed its name in June 2019 to Carnegie Climate Governance Initiative (C2G).

The team had found that the term “geoengineering” was making it difficult to involve some important interlocutors in governance discussions, as it conflated quite different approaches. In particular, some actors interested in CDR did not want to be associated with SRM, and made it explicitly clear that as long as the initiative used the geoengineering term, they could not engage with it.

This offered an important lesson: an umbrella concept that was widely accepted in the academic and scientific literature did not translate well to public policy, and brought with it a set of assumptions that made it politically difficult for some parties to engage.

This conflation was cited as one reason why the UNEA resolution did not pass. This conclusion also appeared to be shared by the IPCC, which steered away from using the term, they could not engage with it.

Despite initial concerns that this name change might raise questions about C2G’s motives, it was well-received and may have a catalytic effect on others, as more actors began to separate conversations about SRM and CDR.

At the same time, C2G’s mission remains unchanged. The team remains focused on the governance of large-scale carbon dioxide removal and solar radiation modification, under the broad umbrella of emerging climate-altering technologies and approaches.
Marking this growing interest, C2G gained two new funders, and was able to bring on five new additional team members, adding to the team’s own diversity. The Advisory Group also expanded, including more voices to guide the direction of the initiative. This will be very helpful as C2G continues to focus on education and learning, and moves to engage new audiences, including outreach to youth networks who have become increasingly influential in public policy on climate change.

With the team growing in size and expertise, the initiative released a number of reports during this period including a technical briefing paper on knowledge gaps on climate-related geoengineering in relation to CBD; numerous infographics; and reports on the need for governance and readiness for large-scale dioxide removal. The team also began translating a number of its information products into Chinese, Spanish, and French.

All these publications can be accessed via the C2G website: https://www.c2g2.net/.

Carnegie New Leaders

The Carnegie New Leaders (CNL) program provides enrichment opportunities for the next generation of leaders who are interested in exploring the ethical dimensions of issues relating to business, foreign policy, and economic development. Managed by former Carnegie Council Senior Fellow and Program Director Devin Stewart and current Carnegie Council Program Associate Amanda Ghanooni, events include off-the-record briefings, site visits, and networking and social events. Conor Moran, a financial tech executive, led the CNL program as term president and Amelia Wolf, GIS intelligence analyst, was the president of the Carnegie New Leaders’ Washington, DC chapter.

For the 2019 program year, the CNL Advisory Council launched a new Salon Series. Designed as bimonthly off-the-record interactive talks, the Salon featured leading experts in finance and economics, war and security, humanitarian and public health advocacy, technology, climate change, and law, to facilitate an open symposium on three main questions: What is the moral character of the world we live in today? What does it mean to be an ethical leader in this world? What can a group like CNL do to act on that virtue? These Salons featured Brigadier General Robert S. Cooley, Jr., the commanding general of one of the four U.S. Army Reserve Civil Affairs Commands.

In addition to the Salons, the Carnegie New Leaders hosted other briefings with speakers such as Sarah Jackson, deputy regional director for East Africa at Amnesty International; Joel Rosenthal, president of Carnegie Council; and former U.S. Secretary of Defense Chuck Hagel.

In addition to the Salons, the Carnegie New Leaders hosted other briefings with speakers such as Sarah Jackson, deputy regional director for East Africa at Amnesty International; Joel Rosenthal, president of Carnegie Council; and former U.S. Secretary of Defense Chuck Hagel.

Building on a previous successful partnership with UN Women of New York, CNL celebrated the 2019 Commission on the Status of Women by inviting women politicians from the national, state, and city level for a reception and panel titled “Political Leadership: Beyond Gender.”
U.S. Congresswoman Yvette D. Clarke, New York Assemblywoman Nily Rozic, and New York City Council Member Helen Rosenthal participated in a discussion with Erin Vilardi of VoteRunLead.

Site visits are also a staple of the Carnegie New Leaders program. Notable visits included the CNL’s return to the U.S. Military Academy at West Point with Major Scott Parsons; a trip to the headquarters of the International Rescue Committee for a roundtable discussion with Kelly Razzouk, director of humanitarian policy and advocacy and Melody Westen, associate director for strategic development; and a briefing at the United Nations Foundation with Wasim Mir, senior fellow on UN reform.

Carnegie New Leaders DC

The CNL DC chapter also hosted several talks during the program year. Speakers included Roger Sorkin, an award-winning producer, writer, and director and founder of the American Resilience Project; and Gina Bennett, a member of the CIA’s Senior Analytic Service.

CNL DC also held a roundtable discussion on ethics and space exploration with the Adam F. Greenstone, NASA’s agency counsel for ethics, and G. Ryan Faith, a space policy expert, moderated by Daniel Mandell, CNL DC member. CNL DC also hosted Harry Kazianis, CNL DC member. CNL DC also hosted Harry Kazianis, director of Korea Studies at the Center for the National Interest, in conversation with CNL member Gil Barndollar, director of Middle East Studies at the Center for the National Interest.

Student Ambassadors

Based in the New York City area, Carnegie Council Student Ambassadors help the Council connect with their universities, publicize events, and plan new partnerships. A commitment of a full academic year is required. Student Ambassadors are invited to all public events at the Council, as well as some special invitation-only events, such as CNL site visits. Each fall, Carnegie Council hosts a networking lunch for Ambassadors to connect with peers in universities across the NYC Metro area. The program enables students to further their professional development, explore their leadership and communication talents, and gain access to a unique career network in international affairs.

Ethics in Business

To celebrate the fifth annual Global Ethics Day in October 2018, Carnegie Council teamed up with ACCA (the Association of Chartered Certified Accountants) and CFA Institute to produce the Ethics in Business: In Their Own Words interview series. It features global business leaders exploring how their organizations are preparing for an ethical future in the face of threats and challenges presented by globalization, technology, and human psychology.

In the 2018-2019 program year, six interviews were conducted in New York, Tokyo, Hong Kong, Beijing, and London. They were all hosted by Magalie Laguerre-Wilkinson, producer and reporter at CUNY TV and associate producer at 60 Minutes. The series featured Helen Brand, ACCA chief executive; Paul Smith, CFA Institute CEO; David MacLennan, Cargill chairman and CEO; Jennifer Tan, AlipayHK CEO; David Wu, Deloitte China vice chairman; and Hiro Mizuno, GPIF executive managing director and CIO.

Global Ethics Weekly

Launched in June 2018, Global Ethics Weekly is a podcast series focusing on current international issues from an ethical perspective. Creator, producer, and host Alex Woodson talks with Carnegie Council senior staff, fellows, and affiliates, and weaves in excerpts from the Council’s extensive archive of talks by many of the world’s most distinguished political scientists and policymakers.

The podcast covered a range of topics including changing narratives in U.S. foreign policy with Gvosdev and Castleberry-Hernandez, immigrants and refugees with Rajagopalan, past and present Taliban-U.S. negotiations with Cristol, and the Trump administration’s “assault on ethics” with Rosenthal. The podcast took breaks around Thanksgiving and Christmas/New Year’s, but otherwise it was published every week in the 2019 program year.

Public Affairs

The Public Affairs program, directed by Joanne Myers, concluded in June 2019 after 24 years of superlative programming. Featuring presentations by policymakers, scholars, journalists, and authors, the series touched on countless issues in international and domestic affairs. In addition to the public events, Myers also conducted several podcast interviews. Here are some highlights from the 2018-2019 season:

Advancements in Technology

Technology has become more pervasive and invasive than ever before, according to crisis management expert Ian Mitroff. He warned against the 21st century “technological mindset”—the belief that technology will solve every problem—as it lacks significant foresight into potential negative unintended consequences. The manipulation of a few lines of code can have disastrous real-world consequences, as outlined by The New York Times’ David Sanger, who proposed a sort of digital Geneva Convention to protect civilians from the types of cyberattacks that have already been piloted by actors like North Korea and Russia. Arthur Holland Michel, founder and co-director of the Center for the Study of the Drone at Bard College, reminded us that technological advancements can also be used domestically to infringe on people’s right to privacy.

Peace and Security

Former U.S. Secretary of Homeland Security Janet Napolitano argued that “climate, cyber, then mass gun violence” pose the biggest security threats of our time, when answering the perennial question: How safe are we? Innovation and a conceptual re-imagining of the rules of war are required to combat these new transnational threats, according to Sean McFate, professor of strategy at the National Defense University and Georgetown University’s School of Foreign Service. University of Oxford China Centre’s George Magnus provided an in-depth analysis of the rise of China’s authoritarian leader Xi Jinping in the discussion of his book Red Flags: Why Xi’s China is in Jeopardy. Christopher R. Hill, former U.S. ambassador to South Korea, stressed the importance of working together with China on issues like the denuclearization of the Korean Peninsula, warning against disagreements on trade prohibiting cooperation on other pressing diplomatic issues.

Challenges to Liberal Democracy

Renowned political scientist Francis Fukuyama divulged his worries about current international trends, telling the audience that the rise of global populism is the single biggest threat to global democracy. Journalist John B. Judis expanded on this, coupling the threat of populist leaders with their nationalist sentiments. The Brookings Institution’s Robert Kagan argued that no other nation in history had taken such a high degree of responsibility for global security, so it was only natural that the American public would push back against paying more than their fair share in upholding international institutions. In a panel discussion entitled “The Fight for Liberty,” Council on Foreign Relations’ Max Boot, Columbia University’s Philip Bobbit, Human Rights Foundation’s Garry Kasparov, and The New York Times’ Bret Stephens claimed that forging renewed discussions on moral values and basic principles such as freedom of speech, a free press, and the rule of law could help renew public trust in liberalism. Finally, The New Yorker’s Adam Gopnik reminded us that liberalism is not merely a partisan talking point but a humanist philosophy that combines the “tradition of individual liberty” with the “tradition of pressing us toward ever-greater social equality.”
Journalism, Free Speech, and the Search for Truth

The Brookings Institution’s Marvin Kalb stressed the importance of the free press, “the fourth branch of government,” whose investigative role is integral in keeping the other three in line. Alan Rusbridger, who oversaw the digitization of The Guardian during his 20-year tenure as editor-in-chief, discussed the importance of newspapers being arbiters of truth during his visit to Carnegie Council. David Kaye, United Nations special rapporteur on the promotion and protection of the right to freedom of opinion and expression, discussed these challenges during his book talk on Speech Police: The Global Struggle to Govern the Internet.

Lee Bollinger, president of Columbia University, and Geoffrey Stone, professor at the University of Chicago, reminded us that the United States stands alone in the commitment to protecting free speech because of the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution.

U.S. Global Engagement

In January 2018, Carnegie Council appointed Nikolas K. Gvosdev as senior fellow of the U.S. Global Engagement (USGE) Program. Gvosdev is a professor of national security affairs at the U.S. Naval War College, where he holds the Captain Jerome E. Levy Chair in economic geography and national security. He also sits on the editorial advisory board for the Council’s journal Ethics & International Affairs (EIA) and has contributed to the EIA blog since 2014.

At Carnegie Council, he is focusing on examining the emergence of new narratives for U.S. involvement in world affairs. This included hosting working group sessions and public meetings, recording podcasts, and publishing blog posts. Additionally, Gvosdev has joined community conversations on this topic in Newport, Rhode Island; Stamford, Connecticut; Boynton Beach, Florida; Wichita, Kansas; and Des Moines, Iowa.

USGE has convened several official working group sessions at Carnegie Council with nineteen unique participants, spanning three program years. In 2018-19, the second of these working groups followed a talk with Asha Castleberry-Hernandez of The George Washington University and Ali Wyne of RAND Corporation on the enduring relevance of foreign policy in American life. The program convened additional working groups during this phase of the project, focusing on potential foreign policy narratives emerging in American politics, as well as the new global realities those narratives need to explain and address. These working groups were aligned with public events with, respectively, the Atlantic Council’s Ash Jain and Wyne. Jain discussed an Atlantic Council project to affirm basic principles to guide foreign policy, while Wyne considered whether the framework of great power competition is a useful way to understand, organize, and support policymaking.

USGE also convened additional public events without working groups. In October 2018, the Council hosted a breakfast talk with Derek S. Reveron of the U.S. Naval War College on the continuities and departures in foreign policy in the early Trump administration, with an eye toward identifying the underlying dynamics that may be changing in the years to come. Another independent public event was a popular debate in January 2019 between U.S. Naval War College’s Tom Nichols and Eurasia Group’s Ian Bremmer on the benefits and perils of globalism and globalization, as well as their political effects.

USGE issued an interim report in December 2018, “Misconnecting with the U.S. Public: Narrative Collapse and U.S. Foreign Policy,” which summarized the research related to the working groups, public events, and community conversations.

Carnegie Ethics Online

Run by Madeleine Lynn, former communications director, this monthly web column on ethics in international affairs offered a platform for both up-and-coming and established writers from around the world. Here are some highlights:

In September, before the large-scale protests started, Hong Kong-based lawyer and author Jason Y. Ng wrote about rising oppression in the former British colony. In February, Sidi Omar, UN representative for Frente POLISARIO, a liberation movement aiming to secure the independence of Western Sahara, wrote a column detailing the history of his homeland and why there was hope for lasting peace in a long-running conflict with Morocco. A Global Ethics Weekly podcast accompanied this article. And in May, Philip Caruso, military veteran and former Carnegie Council fellow, explained why immigration is a national security imperative.

1919: The Year of the Crack Up

Created and hosted by historian and Carnegie Council Senior Fellow Ted Widmer, “1919: The Year of the Crack-Up” is a special podcast series about the events of 1919, a turbulent year that in many ways shaped the 20th century and the modern world. As for the title, “The Crack-Up” comes from an essay of the same name by F. Scott Fitzgerald, where he wrote, The test of a first-rate intelligence is the ability to hold two opposed ideas in the mind at the same time, and still retain the ability to function. Widmer worked with The New York Times on a series of long features on the legacy of 1919. These podcasts were designed to complement the articles with interviews with each of the writers.

During this time, there were questions about the role of the U.S. in the world during the “Wilsonian Moment,” as described by Harvard University’s Erez Manela. Outside of the United States, populations were hoping to build democracies of their own. University of Southern California’s Kyung Moon Hwang discussed the creation of the Korean Declaration of Independence in 1919 and the birth of democracy in Korea. Trinity College Dublin’s
Christopher L. Pastore also reminded us that the Irish Declaration of Independence was adopted during that same year. Domestically, however, large numbers of Americans questioned Wilson’s version of “democracy,” especially African-Americans. Professors Nan Woodruff and Adam Green expanded on the problems American minorities were facing in 1919, analyzing the significance of a terrible massacre in Elaine, Arkansas and race riots in Chicago, Illinois, respectively. Concurrently, cities were thriving, and Hollywood was booming after the end of the First World War, explained University of Wisconsin-Madison’s David Bordwell. However, conservative forces were also very strong, as seen with the ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment prohibiting the sale of alcohol, said Harvard University’s Lisa McGirr.

You can find the Crack-Up podcasts here: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/programs/the-crack-up

The Living Legacy of the First World War

Launched in the summer of 2017, the goal of “The Living Legacy” project was to publish original research on World War I; its long-term impacts on societies around the world, particularly the United States; and its lasting imprint on the present. This fellowship program was led by Senior Fellow Reed Bonadonna, a retired Marine Corps colonel and field historian. Nine research fellows were selected. The project was made possible by a grant from the Richard Lounsbery Foundation and concluded at the end of 2019.

Carnegie Peacebuilding Conversations in The Hague, The Netherlands

Four of the nine fellows attended the Carnegie Peacebuilding Conversations in The Hague, The Netherlands, hosted at the Peace Palace, September 24-26, 2018. The presenting fellows were Mary Barton, Phil Caruso, Zach Dorfman, and Richard Millett. They were joined in The Netherlands by Bonadonna, Carnegie Council President Joel Rosenthal, and Carnegie Council Board Chairman Stephen Hibbard. The First World War fellows presented their work at a panel on September 25 titled “Education for Peace: The Living Legacy of the First World War.” They offered insights into the Great War’s lasting impacts on counterterrorism strategies, aerial combat, the use and restriction of chemical weapons, and U.S. relations with Latin America.

Living Legacy of the First World War Event in New York

In addition to the September conference, Carnegie Council organized an event in New York on November 13, 2018 with the remaining five fellows. Tanisha Fazal, Christopher Capozzola, Katherine Akey, Charles Sorrie, and Seiko Mimaki presented their research findings to a full audience during an invitation-only luncheon at the Merrill House auditorium. The fellows’ presentations addressed the war’s long-term effects on trauma treatment and diagnosis, the politics of the U.S. defense industry, the public’s perception of war and the missing images of soldiers’ wounds, press freedoms and censorship, humanitarianism and alternative visions of cosmopolitan ethics.

Global Ethics Day, October 2018

October 17, 2018 marked the fifth annual Global Ethics Day, and it was the biggest year yet. By Carnegie Council’s count, there were 140+ activities by organizations and individuals in over 50 countries. There were activities in Asia, Africa, Australia, Eurasia, Europe, North America, South America, and the Middle East. Started by Carnegie Council in 2014 to celebrate its Centennial, Global Ethics Day is an opportunity to explore the role of ethics in our professions and everyday lives. With a growing social media presence, the #GlobalEthicsDay2018 hashtag was shared across digital platforms to highlight topics such as climate change, ethics in business, personal values, human rights, and more. Here are a few highlights:

The Association of Chartered Certified Accountants (ACCA), a global organization founded in the UK, organized a host of “follow the sun” activities around the world, many in partnership with CFA Institute, including film festivals and roundtables.

Besides the events on October 17, Carnegie Council, CFA Institute, and ACCA also produced a video interview series titled Ethics in Business: In Their Own Words, which featured a number of global CEOs, including: Helen Brand, chief executive of ACCA, and Paul Smith, president and CEO of CFA Institute. (For more, see the description in the Program Highlights section.)

Universities and schools around the globe were some of the most visible Global Ethics Day participants. In Bangladesh, BRAC University held a day of events on ethics, including lectures, film screenings, debates, panel discussions, and activities focused on protecting the environment. In Muscat, Oman, the Capital Private School organized a beach clean-up. And the Universidad Tecnológica de Honduras held a series of events, including radio interviews.

Local organizations also continued exploring the role of ethics in their respective industries. In South Africa, Sophiatown Community Psychological Services hosted a morning workshop for NGOs titled “ETHICS MATTER TO NGOS.” And in Nova Scotia, Canada, the South Shore Public Libraries gave participants national flags in a random draw. They were encouraged to color the flags and research the country in question to evaluate whether they had ethical governance.

International Student Essay Contest

Is it important to live in a democracy? This was the topic for the 2018 international student essay contest. Carnegie Council received more entries for 2018 than in any previous year, with representation from schools in 65 countries.

Of the nine winners (four high school students, three undergraduates, and two graduates), three came from the United States, with the others from Argentina, Colombia, Ghana, Hungary, South Korea, and Tunisia. Many of the winning essays addressed issues connected to democracy and governance in the students’ home countries, with topics including “illiberal democracy” in Hungary, the 2011 Tunisian Revolution, and Argentina’s “Dirty War.”

Fifth Annual Student Research Conference, May 2019

Organized by Program Associate Amanda Ghanooni and former Senior Fellow and Program Director Devin Stewart—with the help of the Council’s Student Ambassadors—the fifth annual Student Research Conference started with a networking session, followed by 11 student presentations, selected from 36 submissions across the United States. The winning presentation was by Fordham University’s Josephine Marrocco. It was titled, “Sex, Drugs and Propaganda: Why AIDS Persists in the Russian Federation.” It examined the use of government propaganda in the context of Russia’s AIDS crisis.

Other presentations touched on various ethical issues, including climate change, state terrorism, U.S. democracy, trade disputes, gender equality, poverty reduction, immigration, student activism, and humanitarian policy. The panel of judges included scholars from Hunter College and Carnegie Council.

Robert J. Myers Fellows Fund

As president of Carnegie Council from 1980 to 1994, Robert J. Myers spearheaded an international effort to promote ethics education. He believed that ethical inquiry could be enhanced by sharing ideas and experiences across time, space, and culture. In honor of Robert Myers’ legacy, Carnegie Council established the Robert J. Myers Fellows Fund in 2014, the Council’s Centennial year. The Fund supports and promotes activities of the Council’s community that embody Myers’ vision of effective ethical inquiry rooted in local experiences and communities. This year, 13 projects were chosen, spanning Indonesia, Germany, Japan, Czech Republic, Ghana, Venezuela, and more. Here are the recipients and their projects:

- Atik Ambarwati
  Yayasan Kartini Indonesia, Pacific Delegate
  Project dedicated to strengthening interfaith dialogue among youth and women to promote social inclusivity and religious tolerance in Central Java, Indonesia.

- Sabrina Axster
  Johns Hopkins University, Ethics Fellow for the Future Alumna
  Research exploring the privatization of immigration detention in Germany.

- Lyn Boyd-Judson
  Oxford Initiative for Global Ethics and Human Rights, Global Ethics Fellow Alumna
  Creation of the Global Women’s Narratives Project, a narrative platform that amplifies women’s stories from around the world. Themes include war and peace, religion, global health, gendered violence, life’s work, and identity.

- Philip Caruso
  Harvard Law School, Pacific Delegate, “Living Legacy of the First World War” Fellow
  Research on the ethical considerations and strategic necessities for Montenegro, the findings of which contributed to the development of the United States’ national security strategy for Central Asia.

- Joshua Eisenman
  University of Texas, Austin, Global Ethics Fellow Alumnus
  Fieldwork in South Africa, Namibia, Ghana, Ethiopia, and Djibouti on the ethical questions around China’s political and military objectives in Africa.

- James Farrer
  Sophia University, Pacific Fellow
  Urban sociology, community outreach, and educational project exploring the relationship of artisanal ethics to community resilience in a Japanese urban culinary community, with the goal of creating a digital platform in which stories about work and culinary entrepreneurship are shared both within a community and more broadly across borders with students and researchers.

- Yukari Kayama
  Mitsubishi Corporation, Pacific Delegate
  Project organizing conferences for Japanese youth alongside the Y20 summit in Japan.

- Layla Kilolu
  East-West Center, Pacific Delegate
  Research on bridging the knowledge gap for government officials in Hawaii with resilience strategies being employed in Europe; focusing on the protection of groups most vulnerable to climate change impacts.

- Michael Laha
  Asia Society, Carnegie New Leader
  Interview-based research in the Czech Republic on Czech-Chinese relations and European cybersecurity.

- Kwame Marfo
  Africa Empowerment Fund, Carnegie New Leader
  In-field assessment in Ghana on the implications of the nation’s national soccer team for economic development on the African continent.

- Rory Mondschein
  International Association for Political Science Students, Carnegie New Leader
  Research on the economic externalities of neglecting the rights of people with disabilities and the extent to which disability rights are intersectional with other mainstream issues—such as health care spending, education, and employment.

- Jaehyeon Park
  University of California, Los Angeles, Pacific Delegate
  Community-based fieldwork in Yogyakarta, Indonesia on how land titling for semi-formal or customary rights enhances tenure security.

- Felix Quintero
  Inter-American Development Bank, Carnegie New Leader
  Research project identifying conflicting challenges faced by Venezuelan actors involved with the design and future implementation of an amnesty and transitional justice process.

International Seminar on Wellbeing in Northern Ireland, October 2018

In the year of the 20th anniversary of the Good Friday Agreement, it was an appropriate time to explore the wellbeing of Northern Ireland’s citizens, and the work being undertaken for future generations across all communities.

!Sir John Elvidge, Theresa Donaldson, Quintin Oliver, and Rolf Alter in conversation at the International Seminar on Wellbeing in Northern Ireland, October 2018.
The international seminar, produced in cooperation with Carnegie UK Trust, celebrated and reflected on the progress made in improving wellbeing in Northern Ireland.

The event featured the views of senior politicians and stakeholders on the progress made in Northern Ireland to date, the current situation, remaining challenges, and aspirations for the future. Speakers included Carnegie UK Trust Chief Executive Martyn Evans, former U.S. Senator George Mitchell, the Democratic Unionist Party’s Peter Weir, Sinn Féin’s Máirtín Ó Muilleoir, and many more.

Control and Responsible Innovation of Artificial Intelligence (AI), December 2018

AI’s potential for doing good and creating benefits is almost boundless, but equally there is a potential for doing great harm. This panel discussion explored the findings of a comprehensive three-year project at The Hastings Center, which encompassed safety procedures, engineering approaches, and legal and ethical oversight.

Wendell Wallach, Carnegie-Uehiro Fellow and scholar at Yale University’s Interdisciplinary Center for Bioethics, was joined by IBM’s Francesca Rossi, University of California, Berkeley’s Stuart Russell, Cornell University’s Bart Selman, and The Hastings Center’s David Roscoe for this lively panel discussion.

For more, please go to: https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/studio/multimedia/20181204-control-responsible-innovation-artificial-intelligence

Since 2003, this annual international conference has convened in Tokyo, Oxford, or New York to discuss important topics concerning practical ethics. This year the meeting took place in Oxford, United Kingdom and featured panel discussions on bioethics.

This field has made great advances in reforming medical research and clinical practice, research ethics committees have been introduced to protect human and animal participants, and policies have been introduced to protect individual privacy. However, the world has changed very much in this century; the human genome has been sequenced, genomic medicine is being put into practice, and computing power has massively increased. But, this new era of big data and artificial intelligence holds both great promise and great peril. International barriers have fallen away in the face of globalization, medical tourism is rife, and players such as China and Russia are pushing forward with controversial research like gene editing of human embryos.

The keynote lecture for this conference, given by Johns Hopkins University’s Jeffrey Kahn and chaired by Carnegie Council President Joel Rosenthal, answered the timely question: Do new technologies require new ethics? Additional panel discussions explored questions like: How should medical ethics and bioethics evolve in this new environment? Is individual consent and privacy viable or desirable in the 21st century? How should our concepts and principles change to address these major challenges?
Ethics & International Affairs, the Council’s flagship publication, is a peer-reviewed quarterly journal published by Cambridge University Press. EIA publishes original essays and articles that apply rigorous thinking about principles of ethics and justice to discussions of real world issues related to such topics as war and peace, global institutional arrangements, and emerging technologies. This year it showcased an exceptional list of contributors covering a broad range of topics, including artificial intelligence, human rights, and cyber governance. In addition to content listed below, each issue features a variety of book reviews.

For current and past issues, blog posts, and more, go to https://www.ethicsandinternationalaffairs.org.

Fall 2018 (Vol 32.3)
This issue is headlined by a roundtable guest edited by James Pattison (University of Manchester) on the ethics of alternatives to war, with contributions from Alex J. Bellamy (University of Queensland), Corneliu Bjola (University of Oxford), Cécile Fabre (All Souls College, Oxford), Michael L. Gross (University of Haifa), and Pattison. The collection explores a wide range of important and controversial topics, from the case for foreign electoral subversion to the dark side of nonviolent resistance. This issue also includes an essay by Ian Hurd (Northwestern University) on the empire of international legalism, and a feature by Alejandra Mancilla (University of Oslo) on the moral weight of territorial claims in Antarctica. The issue is rounded out by a pair of review essays, one by Micheline Ishay (University of Denver) on human rights and the other by Anne Peters (Max Planck Institute for Comparative Public Law and International Law) on international law. (See also EIA Managing Editor Adam Read-Brown’s podcast interview with Deibert.)

Spring 2019 (Vol 33.1)
The centerpiece of this issue is a roundtable organized by Rafael Biermann (Friedrich Schiller University) examining how states and other actors balance legal norms, moral values, and national interests in various policy areas. Contributors to this discussion include Nigel Biggar (University of Oxford), Biermann, Megan Bradley (McGill University), Gareth Evans (Australian National University), Stefan Oeter (University of Hamburg), and Hugo Slim (International Committee of the Red Cross).

Winter 2018 (Vol. 32.4)
Tackling one of the most pressing global governance topics of the day, this issue features a roundtable organized by Duncan B. Hollis (Temple University) and Tim Maurer (Carnegie Endowment for International Peace) on competing normative visions for cyberspace: What should our goals be for cyberspace, and how will the answer to that question impact its governance? The collection includes contributions from Ronald J. Deibert (University of Toronto), Daniel J. Weitzner (Massachusetts Institute of Technology), Hollis and Jens David Ohlin (Cornell University), and Martha Finnemore (The George Washington University). This issue also includes an essay by Ş. İlgü Özler (SUNY New Paltz) on the seventieth anniversary of the adoption of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights and the progress and challenges thus far. Bolarinwa Adediran (University of Manchester) contributes a feature article that examines the veto power of the UN Security Council, disputing the utility of a proposed code of conduct. The issue is rounded out by a pair of review essays, one by Micheline Ishay (University of Denver) on human rights and the other by Anne Peters (Max Planck Institute for Comparative Public Law and International Law) on international law. (See also EIA Associate Editor John Krzyzaniak’s podcast interview with Pattison.)
In addition, this issue explores the ethics of artificial intelligence, with an essay by Sean Kanuck (Stanford University) evaluating the legal and moral considerations of AI and what it means to be human in the digital age. Edward C. Luck (Columbia University) provides a response to Bolarinwa Adediran’s article in the Winter 2018 issue on the proposed code of conduct for the UN Security Council, and Christian Schemmel (University of Manchester) contributes a review essay on inequalities and pluralist approaches.

Summer 2019 (Vol. 33.2)

In this issue, the editors brought together top scholars in the field to explore how artificial intelligence will affect various aspects of global affairs in the coming decades, including human rights, economic development, international security, global health, and even the Arctic frontier. The resulting roundtable, “Artificial Intelligence and the Future of Global Affairs,” features work from Heather M. Roff (Johns Hopkins University), Steven Livingston (George Washington University) and Mathias Risse (Harvard University), Jeffrey D. Sachs (Columbia University), Amandeep Singh Gill (Secretariat of the High-level Panel on Digital Cooperation), Sara E. Davies (Griffith University), and Patrick Lin (California Polytechnic State University). The issue also contains a feature article by Sarah-Vaughan Brakman (Villanova University) analyzing the principle of subsidiarity in The Hague Convention on Intercountry Adoption, and an essay by Kimberly Hutchings (Queen Mary University of London) on decolonizing global ethics and the idea of the “pluriverse.” Inderjeet Parmar (City, University of London) contributes a review essay on global power shifts, diversity, and hierarchy in international politics.

EIA Interview Series (Podcasts with Transcripts)

This long-running series provides journal contributors with an opportunity to discuss their recent work. The interviews this year, with one author each from the Fall and Winter 2018 issues, were conducted by EIA Managing Editor Adam Read-Brown and former Associate Editor John Krzyzaniak.

- Ronald Deibert discusses his work on cybersecurity, human rights, and global cyber governance, presenting a “human-centric approach” toward cybersecurity that differs from the traditional “national security-centric” policies and practices.

EIA Website

In addition to the content of the print issues, the EIA website featured four Online Exclusives this year: “Japan’s Withdrawal from the International Whaling Commission: A Disaster that Could Have Been Avoided,” by former IWC chair Cristian Maquieira; “After Katowice: Three Civil Society Strategies for Ratcheting Up Climate Ambition,” by Ewan Kingston (Duke University); “Tackling Climate Change: Why Us Now?” by Henry Shue (Merton College, University of Oxford); and “Sri Lanka 2.0: Independent Inquiry Shows UN ‘Systemic Failure’ in Myanmar” by Cecilia Jacob (Australian National University). Carnegie Council Senior Fellow Nikolas Gvosdev remains a frequent blog contributor to the EIA website, focusing on American foreign policy and questions of world order. The blog also features “What We’ve Been Reading” by the EIA editors, a periodic roundup of news and current events related to ethics and international affairs, and occasional postings about conferences of interest around the world.

We Can’t Do It Without You!

Thanks to your ongoing generosity, Carnegie Council can provide independent and inclusive platforms for scholars, leaders, and decision-makers to explore the major challenges and moral imperatives confronting the world today. In supporting the Council, you are helping citizens across the globe to better understand and address these collective issues in reasoned, cooperative, and thoughtful ways.

Your contribution—no matter how small—helps ensure that Carnegie Council can continue its public service of convening, publishing, providing expertise, and offering educational resources and opportunities free of charge to anyone, anywhere. Please help us continue this important work.

To support Carnegie Council, please visit our donation page at https://www.carnegiecouncil.org/join_us/donate, contact the Development Department at 212-838-4120, or email info@cceia.org.

Founded by Andrew Carnegie in 1914, Carnegie Council for Ethics in International Affairs is an educational, nonprofit, nonpartisan organization that produces lectures, publications, and multimedia materials on the ethical challenges of living in a globalized world. Its work is rooted in the premise that the incorporation of moral principles into discussions of international affairs will yield a more peaceful, just world. The educational value of the Council’s programs lies in its three-part formula: thematic focus on ethics, access to world-renowned experts, and an in-house studio that produces original video and audio resources for a global market.
