

Carnegie Council's Carnegie New Leaders (CNL) program provides an exclusive platform for the next generation of ethical global leaders to explore a variety of issues including corruption, technology, war, and the environment.

To apply for membership, please go to the Council's website and look under the "programs" tab for Carnegie New Leaders or go directly to this link. Applicants are asked to provide a CV, letter of interest, and two references. If you should have any questions, please contact the CNL program staff at 212-838-4120 or by email at cnl@cceia.org.

Candidates must meet the following criteria:

- Age 40 or under
- Demonstrated interest in international affairs
- Demonstrated excellence in their field

Through a series of informal and formal gatherings, CNL members join an esteemed community of business professionals, policy makers, social innovators, and scholars who are changing the way we approach global ethics in the 21st century. From interactive conversations with dynamic leaders to site visits with peers, this exceptional group provides a variety of ways to learn and engage in productive discussions and projects. Past programs have included leadership training at West Point and Fort Hamilton as well as private dinners with former US Department of State Director of Policy Planning Anne-Marie Slaughter, journalist and ISIS expert Michael Weiss, and political activist and presidential candidate Lawrence Lessig.
